Climate information and services (CIS) are defined as information and services that are derived from climate data and are used to inform decision-making. CIS can be provided in a variety of ways, including through government agencies, private companies, and non-governmental organizations. CIS can be used for a wide range of purposes, including to inform policy-making, to support disaster risk reduction, and to improve the resilience of communities and ecosystems.

UNDP has been working to support countries in developing and delivering CIS for many years. UNDP has a strong track record of working with governments and other stakeholders to develop and deliver CIS that are tailored to the needs of the country and the community. UNDP has a strong commitment to supporting countries in developing and delivering CIS that are sustainable and resilient.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

After completing this e-tutorial, participants will be able to:

- Define climate information and services.
- Identify the uses of climate information and services in development planning and policy.
- Discuss the role of legislation in strengthening climate information and services.
- Provide examples of instruments available to governments for mainstreaming climate information and services.

CONTENT AND STRUCTURE

The e-tutorial is structured into four main sections: Introduction, Climate Information and Services, Climate Information and Services in Development Planning and Policy, and Climate Information and Services in Legislation. The Introduction section provides an overview of the e-tutorial and its objectives. The Climate Information and Services section provides a detailed overview of the concept of CIS and its uses. The Climate Information and Services in Development Planning and Policy section discusses the role of CIS in development planning and policy-making. The Climate Information and Services in Legislation section discusses the role of legislation in strengthening CIS.

UN CC:Learn is a partnership of more than 30 multilateral organizations supporting countries to design and implement systematic, recurrent and results-oriented climate change learning. At the global level, the partnership supports knowledge-sharing, promotes the development of common climate change learning materials, and coordinates learning interventions through a collaboration of UN agencies and other partners. At the national level, UN CC:Learn supports countries in developing and implementing national climate change learning strategies. Through its engagement at the national and global levels, UN CC:Learn contributes to the implementation of Article 6 of the UNFCCC on training, education and public awareness-raising, and the 2012-2020 Doha Work Programme. Funding for UN CC:Learn is provided by the Swiss Government and UN partners. The Secretariat for UN CC:Learn is hosted by the UN Institute for Training and Research (UNITAR).
